

Dean Peacock is an independent consultant with expertise in program design and implementation, training and technical assistance and materials development. For the last 11 years Mr. Peacock has worked in the United States, Latin America and South Africa where he has worked to promote men's involvement in ending domestic and sexual violence and in fostering sexual and reproductive health. Since working with homeless youth in Nicaragua and later in California, Mr. Peacock founded and directed the MOVE Youth Program in San Francisco, served as a co-author of the Agenda for the Nation To End Violence Against Women. He currently works as a consultant to New York based EngenderHealth, providing technical assistance to their Southern Africa Men As Partners (MAP) program, while also working closely with the Family Violence Prevention Fund on the development of the Building Partnerships Initiative to End Men's Violence. Mr. Peacock has written numerous articles and curricula on issues related to men, masculinity and public health.